

These are some doodles about our cat, Lola.

Full disclosure: she is not actually an elected official. Or a superhero. She also doesn't drink coffee, garden, or date.

My five-year-old son, Max, picked the order of the pages and dictated what to include in quote bubbles. I tried to then string it all together with a storyline so it could double as a storybook as well as a coloring book.

It's free so there will be no refunds offered.

Enjoy!

Lola wasn't just a cat, she was a Super Cat. But she felt that she had even more to offer Cityburg than her superheroics.

So she ran for mayor...

...and won!

Which came with a new set of problems.

Such as how best to protect her secret identity.

Juggling her mayoral duties while being a superhero came with plenty of challenges.

But Lola wasn't scared off by a challenge. Sure, she may have found it difficult to manage her time, but she still had fun.

And she kept an afternoon here or there to tend to her garden...

Or to go out on dates...

And always made certain that her social activities never interfered with her mission to seek out crime and...

umm...

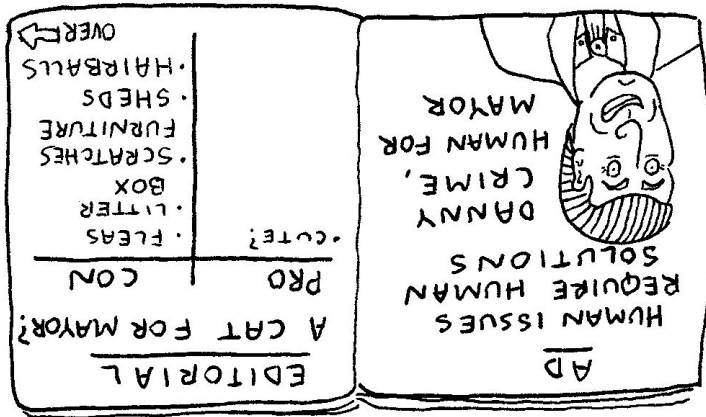

jump at it, I guess?

But not everyone was jazzed.

Sometimes Lola could be a tough boss to work for. She had a lot on her mind at any given time.

And she was facing a tough upcoming election.

But she was an effective leader, and had managed to negotiate peace between the astronauts and hotdogs.

So even being implicated in a drug scandal couldn't tarnish the goodwill that she'd built among voters.

AEROSPACE & HOTDOG MUSEUM

With the exception of a few astronauts, but they're all a bunch of space bullies.

But suddenly things changed after Napgate.

And public perception shifted. For a while, it had appeared that all was lost for Lola's re-election campaign.

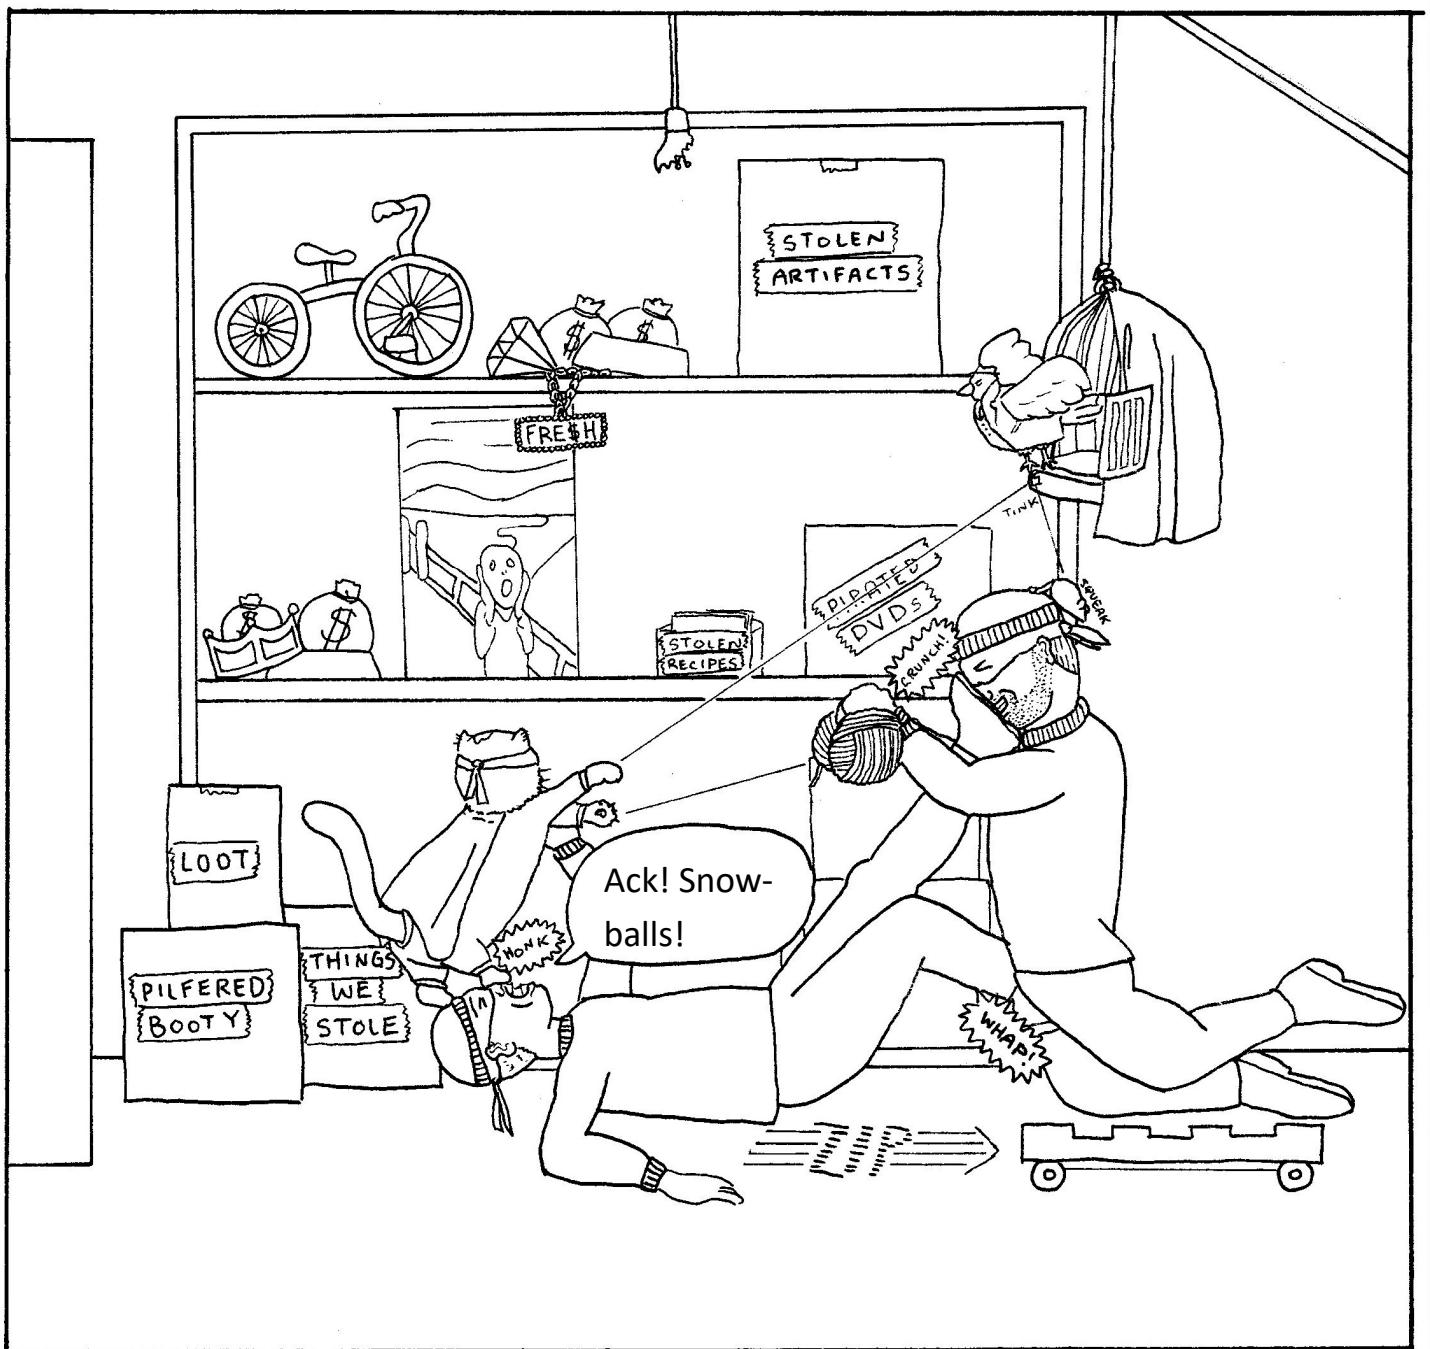

Even this guy seemed to take a dig at her while she was down, whoever he is. Rude.

But then she caught a break when she realized that Danny Crime, her political opponent, was actually a criminal himself! Who'da thunk it?!

But then her stool pigeon got captured before she could get the word out. She'd need to save him!

So, she suited up once more before the election and saved the day. Also, that criminal didn't realize those yarn balls weren't made of snow, I guess.

Danny Crime went to jail, Lola won re-election, and things were super rad. I ran out of pictures so this is THE END!